“One day I will find the right words, and they will be simple.”

Jack Kerouac, The Dharma Bums

Julia Muggenburg is delighted to announce the third solo show of Simon Mullan, Popularis at Belmacz.

Mullan's new works correspond to the Alpha series that derive from numerous collected iconic MA-1 flight, bomber jackets, historically tied to the American Air force. From his collection of various flight jackets, Mullan cuts and dissects them to then form collages using the outer layers of these fabrics. They are then sewn and stretched like a skin.

The humble, ageless and domestic tile appears in this show forming a triptych of varying degrees of white and again using the process of décollage and then collage. The tiles can be seen as a homage to the very simple job of being a tile layer... Fliesenleger!

Mullan romanticises the practice of this job; “The tile pieces are waterproof and shiny... the idea is also that it will be possible to clean them whilst they are hanging... I question here, what is decor, and what is art. What is wall, and what is the art piece.”

The tile goes back to the ancient Orient from very early times here it was used to decorate houses. It has become intrinsic to our culture.

Alongside this piece are three so called skinned bomber jackets, the skins of which were used to form the Alpha series symbolising the remains of subcultures which he explores and adopts these culture's attributes as his own. Some of these subcultures are: rockabilly, greaser (a.k.a. 'raggare' in Sweden), circus / carnie life, hip-hop & rap, the outsider, pariah or freak. On the surface Mullan's work is aesthetically harmonious but below the surface and on investigation there are the harder gestures of masculinity and manhood.

Simon Mullan, Yellow Naked Bombers, 2014

The series Naked Bomber Jackets are not for sale.

The artist states:

The jackets function as a badge similar to motorcycle gangs like the Hells Angels or Bandidos, you automatically become a member of the international Gang or Charter of Simon Mullan supporters by wearing one of these Naked Bomber Jackets.

Furthermore, one has to guarantee that the jacket will be worn, preferably at Art events across the world. The jackets can never be fully owned and can be seen as a temporary loan. With that in mind, the artist hopes to keep up the quality of his work and if the person once has the feeling that she or he cannot support the artists' work anymore, the jacket has to be returned to the artist.

"I hope I will never get back one of these Naked Bomber Jackets"
